NEW! Disciplined Decision-Making for Leadership

Everyday leaders are challenged to make good decisions – usually with limited information under serious time constraints. They need to balance quantitative and qualitative data and then depend on their own judgment to make the right choice

They also need to understand how to convey the vision, strategy and benefits behind those decisions to a variety of audiences; from the rank and file to the Board of Directors to shareholders.

Ben Franklin's "Pro and Con" list isn't enough today, but there are guiding principles for a disciplined approach to decision making.

In this innovative 2-day seminar, business leaders at all levels will learn to improve their odds of success through a disciplined approach to decision-making. Lead by Marilyn Nyman, founder of the Nyman Group, and John Good, a leader in Strategic Decision-Making, executives will also examine and hone their personal style, messages and media to communicate their decisions with confidence, authority and trust.
